The son of Venezuelan immigrants, Dr. Jonathan Milgram grew up in South Florida as an active member of Temple Beth Ahm Israel. Dr. Milgram's colorful childhood, imbued with the mix of his parents' Latin American culture and the old-world Yiddish culture of his grandparents' Romanian shtetl, Novoselitz, laid the groundwork for a life of intellectual inquiry, culminating in his present position as assistant professor of Talmud and Rabbinics at The Jewish Theological Seminary. Dr. Milgram holds two bachelor's degrees, Comparative Literature from Columbia University, and Talmud from JTS. His master's degree in Talmud and rabbinic ordination are from Yeshiva University, and his doctorate in Talmud is from Bar-Ilan University. Dr. Milgram has been visiting assistant professor at Hunter College and has lectured at the Drisha Institute and Yeshivat Chovevei Torah. JTS students voted Dr. Milgram "2010 Professor of the Year." Dr. Milgram is currently writing a study of rabbinic inheritance law in comparative context. The book will engage the multiple strands of traditions in tannaitic literature (Mishnah, Tosefta, and Midrash Halakhah) and compare them to ancient near eastern, Greek, and Roman inheritance practices with the goal of understanding the legal contexts that produced rabbinic inheritance law.
